

David is a serial entrepreneur, interested in the intersection of economics and applied technology. Prior to Surefield, he was a consultant at Microsoft Research working on free-viewpoint video commercialization efforts. Additionally, David founded and ran Mindsite, a consumer Internet and telemedicine offering focused on the mental health market. As the founder and CEO of Redfin, he led product development efforts for a new web-based form of map search, developed a salaried model for residential real estate agents and served on the board of directors through multiple rounds of venture capital. David holds a bachelor's degree in biochemistry from the University of Washington.